MANAMA, Bahrain — Iran is taking advantage of a lull in the Gull fighting to increase oil exports and bolster its economy, Western diplomats said. The Iranians are reported to be Iraq began the so-called "tanker war" in the spring of 1983 for two reasons, diplomats in the Gulf said. One reason reflected hope that an oil crisis would induce the superpowers to intervene and bring about an end to the Gulf war, which Iraq began in September

The other reason was the great vuloerability of Iran to attacks on oil shipping. Tankers are Iran's only means for sending oil abroad. Iraq, which lost its port at Fao to the Iranians in 1980, is still able to send oil abroad by pipelines through Turkey and Saudi Arabia. "It's clear that the whole tanker war was in Iraq's interest and was kept going by Iraq," a Western dip-

Iranian oil exports dropped dramatically in August and September last year, to around 500,000 barrels a day, when Iraq conducted air attacks on the Siri Island loading base. But by this spring, Iran was exporting 1.6 million to 1.8 million barrels a day, according to oil industry reports. This figure, industry sources said, has reached 2 milion barrels.

Oil prices have fluctuated wildly in recent days - from $18 a barrel up to $20 and back down to around $16 — because of fear of a widening conflict. This was followed by a

Mobile Phones Moving Beyond Life in the Fast Lane

By Robert Reinhold

New York Times Server
LOS ANGELES — It is 4:00 P.M. in Southern California and the freeways have become one big moving telephone booth.

Don L. Gevirtz, a business executive, is on the cellular phone in the back seat of his chauffeured Lincoln Continental returning calls during his commute, which takes an hour and a half. "The best place to get me during the day is in the car," he says.

Dr. Mohan Nair, a Torrance psychiatrist, is calling his family for a little self-therapy during a hair-pulling traffic Last month, Dr. Nair started a rage-therapy program for drivers who have trouble controlling their anger on the clogged freeways. Callers, up to a dozen a day, are advised to keep calm. As for his own emotions, Dr. Nair, a self-professed worksholic who spends much of the time on the road away from his family, says the car phone is soothing. "I rarely see my family during the week," he says. "This helps me feel a lot calmer." In New York, Chicago, Dallas, Houston and every other major city the technology of cellular telephones is altering American business, daily life and driving habits in keeping the police posted about his location until the arrest could be made.

Real estate agents, stockbrokers, doctors, sales people, reporters, truant officers and plumbers are buying the devices in growing numbers, using them for business, family communications and, among other things, to help markets. Every major car rental agency offers the phones maintain law and order.

In just three years since the cellular technology was introduced, the number of subscribers has risen to about 884,000, according to the Celiular Telecommunications Industry Association. A year ago it was 500,000.

Nynex Mobile Communication says it has more than

60,000 subscribers in its New York and New England

now in certain cities.

But by far the largest market is Los Angeles, laced by freeways and made for car phones. There are about 100,000 phones in the area and it seems that almost every Mercedes and BMW displays the little zigzag antenna for the cellular phones. But industry officials say that the device is not just a toy for the rich.

"We are seeing more use by unglamorous people with small businesses," said Reed Royalty, a vice president of PacTel Cellular, which, along with LA Cellular, serves the Los Angeles basin. "The idea that it's only movie stars and their agents is pretty much passe."

Thus, for example, Gary Garrett, a locksmith for 18 years, got tired of having to leave the freeway several times a day to look for a telephone booth. Now he takes and makes calls on the road, sometimes calling customers in their cars, and crossing the city several times in a single Cellular phones took on that name because the service area is divided into cells, each with a low-power radio transmitter. A driver crossing the area is automatically transferred from one transmitter to the next without interruption — usually. Calls, including long distance, may be dialed directly, as from any phone.

It is this system that has propelled the growth in car phones. Without the cells, the old radio phones were

Revised GNP. Price Data Give Mixed Signals

By Anne Swardson

WASHINGTON - The U.S. gross national product grew at an annual rate of 2.3 percent in the second quarter, less than previously estimated, the government said Friday, in one of three reports that gave mixed signals about the U.S.

The government said that U.S. consumer prices rose a scant 0.2 percent in July, the lowest monthly increase so far this year.

It also reported that after-tay profits of U.S. corporations rose 4.2 perceot in the second quarter after falling 3.7 percent in the first

The reports had a mixed effect on the markets, which have been looking for signals since the Contmerce Department reported last week that the U.S. trade deficit wideoed dramatically in June. The dollar slid in Europe and New York in response to the GNP revision. (Page 7.) Prices on the New York Stock Exchange were narrowly higher although the dollar dampened their advance. (Page 8.)

The GNP growth figure compared with a original estimate of 6 percent. The revision was attributed primarily to the $15.71 billion trade deficit in June. The June trade gap has caused the dollar to fall on world markets. particularly against the yen, since it was reported last week.

And the White House said Friday that data on exports that contributed to the GNP revision had raised doubts about steady improvement in the trade deficit. The Commerce Department said that the hig June gap in merchan-dise trade caused the net exports entry in the GNP calculations to be vered by $5.5 hillion. The lower figure for net exports does call into question the basic pattern of solid improvement in net exports that had been appearing in earlier estimates," said Leslye Arsht, a deputy White House spokesman. He did not elaborate. But economists predicted that the trade situation would improve in coming months and that the U.S. economy would continue to grow at a moderate pace.

"People should not regard the downward revision" of second-quarter GNP "as a warning sign that the economy is falling apart. It is not," said Donald Straszheim, chief economist of the New York brokerage firm of Merrill Lynch. GNP, a measure of the output of the nation's goods and services. grew 4.4 percent in the first quarter, the fastest expansion in almost three years.

New York Times Service MOSCOW - The decline in Sovict-Japanese relations, accelerated this week by reciprocal spy charges and expulsions, has turned one of Mikhail S. Gorbachev's most promising foreign policy areas into a major disappointment Japanese and Western diplomats including a seemingly insurmountable dispute over who owns the Kurile Islands, the technology-di-version case involving the Toshiba Machine Co., and a round of spy allegations.

Later, the Japanese government ordered a Soviet deputy trade representative to leave Tokyo, contending that he had refused to submit to police questioning in an industrial espionage case.

Some Western and Japanese diplomats say an underlying force in the deterioration of relations is Ivan I, Kovalenko, the Central Committee's senior official in charge of relations with Japan.

Mr. Kovalenko, who was commandant of a prisoner-of-war camp for Japanese captured in the last days of World War II, is blamed by Japanese officials for promoting a tough and conde-

4,000 Miners Dismissed in South Africa: Striker Slain

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispute IOHANNESBURG - Anglo American Corp. dismissed 4,000 striking black miners Friday at the Western Holdings mine in Orange Free State. About 44,000 other South African miners were threatened with dismissal, and a miner was killed when security officers fired on strikers.

The company said the 4,000 miners had voted themselves out of their jobs by refusing to return to work.

The action brought to about 10,000 the number of South African strikers dismissed since the Nanonal Union of Mineworkers started a strike Aug. 8 for higher wages at gold and coal mines.

The union said Friday that secu-rity officers fired lethal ammunition and rubber bullets at strikers Thursday night, killing a man, at the Libanon gold mine operated by Gold Fields of South Africa about 40 miles (65 kilometers) southwest

Gold Fields disputed the union's account. The company said a miner was killed and 20 seriously injured when an "armed mob of 250 peo-ple," including miners, stormed the gate of a hostel at Libanon.

The company said the attackers were under the influence of narcotics and a witch doctor." Mine security personnel fired on them with rubber bullets, Gold Fields

Also Friday, a bus carrying black miners plunged down a cliff, killing 60 persons and injuring 30, South African Broadcasting Corp. said.

The bus was taking the miners from Odendaalarus, a mining town in Orange Free State, to Port Firzbeth on the south coast, the report said. Many miners who work in Orange Free State are from Cister. Orange Free State are from Cisker, a black homeland near the site of

A Deluge of Sympathy for Crash Survivor

Washington Post Service

ANN ARBOR, Michigan -Four-year-old Cecilia Cichan, the sole survivor of the second worst airline disaster in U.S. history, asked for her mother as soon as she regained consciousness and demanded a doll she carried aboard the fatal flight, her grandfauter said.

Her parents and brother were among the vietims in the crash Aug. 16 of a Northwest Airlines jet at Detroit Metropolitan Airport. At least 156 persons died

■ Pilot Disputes Theory

A co-pilot who saw the takeoff of the fatal flight said the wing flaps were extended, contradicting earlier reports they were in the wrong position, officials said Thursday, according to an Associated Press dispatch from Romulus, Michigan.

Officials have said that preliminary findings from flight recorder data indicated that the flaps, which are critical to the lift of the aircraft, were not in the proper positing.

John Lauber, a National Transportation Safety Board member, said the witness, a copilot on another Northwest flight, was one of four pilots who saw the takeoff of the jet. The co-pilot "noticed that the flaps and slats were down. They were in the extended position. This is his report of what he saw, Mr. Lauber said.

He said the other three pilots did not notice anything that looked unusual, which would include flaps set for the wrong posi-

AIDS Tests for Patients Urged at U.S. Hospitals

WASHINGTON - Federal bealth officials have issued guide. virus after being accidentally lines that suggest for the first time that hospital patients be tested for the AIDS virus.

The recommendation Thursday by the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta departs from its policy of advising against wide-spread AIDS testing in U.S. hospitals. But in releasing new standards for protecting the nation's 6.5 milfion health care workers from the spread of the HIV virus, the agency noted the need for health care workers to consider all patients as potentially infected with HIV."

Human immunodeficiency virus. or HIV, is the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome, which cripples the body's immune system.

This is a compromise really. said Dr. Harold Jaffe, chief of the epidemiology branch of the AIDS program at the Centers for Disease Control. "There is no real data to suggest that testing would increase the safety of health care workers. But the reality is that some AIDS testing has already begun and this. document attempts to assure that it will not result in the denial of treatment to those who test positive."

Anxiety about contracting the virus has risen among bealth care workers since the centers reported in May that three hospital workers had been infected with the AIDS splashed with the blood of infected patients. They were the first reported cases of health care workers contracting the virus after a single exposure to blood by a means other than a needle prick. Last month in Atlanta, the Cen-

Pawned American Honor

A startling historical thunderbolt has just dropped, almost as an afterthought to the Iran-contra investigation: the United States came close to using South Africa as a paymaster for the contra rebels in Nicaragua. Is there no end to the American honor that the Reagan administration is willing to spend in this hapless cause?

The South Alrican initiative took place in 1984, before Congress tightened the Boland restrictions on U.S. help for the contras. The motive, evidently, was to help contras and to develop a working relationship between the CIA and South African operatives, with special regard to Angola. At the time, the CIA was barred by another congressional amendment from taking part in Angola's civil war.

Even then, the idea of making common cause with a racist regime would have stirred wide disgust. Context makes the disclosure still more offensive. It is only one in a series of administration lunges in Central America that have traduced policies and principle. President Reagan has been so blindly ardent on Nicaragua that officials following his lead have on one occasion after another approved schemes that soured into national embarrassments:

The Argentine Connection. In its zeal to train a rebel force to oppose the Sandinists, the Reagan administration early obtained help from Argentina, then under the most ruthless military dictatorship in Latin America. Argentine officers worked with former Somoza National Guardsmen to train an exile force; this was the origin of the contras. When Mr. Reagan subsequently backed Britain in the Falkland war, the junta cried betrayal, believing it had earned at least U.S. neutrality. The World Court Debacie. What brought on the Boland amendment was the latture of William Casey, the CIA director, to inform Congress that the CIA was lawlessly mining Nicaraguan waters. When Managua appealed to the World Court, the Reagan administration boycotted the tribunal - and shrugged off a nearunanimous linding in Nicaragua's lavor.

Superpower as Beggar. Denied funds for the contras by Congress, the administration begged for contributions from Saudi Arabia and Brunei, agreeing to their condition that the aid remain secret. Their willingness to help the administration circumvent Congress bought them unhealthy leverage over U.S. policy. Elliott Abrams, the State Department fund-raiser, then lied to Congress about a solicitation he later characterized as demeaning and humiliating.

The Iran Arms Diversion. Whatever the administration's original reason for trading arms for hostages, an additional reason soon blossomed: the chance to divert millions in arms sales profits to the contras. Once again, contra fever led the administration to do what it promised it would never do: deal with terrorists. Mr. Reagan has spent the last nine months struggling to recover his credibility.

It's not hard to see why South Africa could have been tempted to come to the aid of the contras. Doing so would have earned it reaffirmed support from Washington, apartheid or no apartheid. But could any administration official have thought for one minute that South African aid for the contras was worth pawning a part of America's soul?

Tehran Becomes Cheeky

contradiction in terms. But even though, by agreement of everyone but Iran, it is Iranianlaid mines that threaten Gulf navigation, Iranian minesweepers are now out there in international waters trying to pick up mines. Operating in units equipped and trained by the United States in the old days, they are the latest recruits to an international flotilla that includes the Americans, Soviets, British and French, with others perhaps to come.

This development goes beyond the factionalism or disarray or division of labor, whatever it is, that allows Iran to engage in mining and sweeping at the same time. Iran is coming to grant that no Gulf country bas a greater interest than it does in free navigation. Unlike Iraq, Iran does not yet bave pipelines to carry out the oil that finances its part of the Iran-Iraq war. Did Iran neglect this key fact for a while? In attacking the shipping of Iraq's allies, did it ignore that Americans and others might react by helping to keep sea-lanes open? That this new naval presence, while inhibiting Iraq from attacks on Iranian shipping, would also put foreign navies into waters that the Implans insist are theirs alone to control?

To control and to police, Iranian authorities, denying they laid the mines or command the boats that now endanger Gulf traffic, declare that they can perform whatever naval services are required and that the foreign ships can go home. To advertise this claim, they invited Western reporters aboard one of the minesweepers this week. Tehran's minesweepers are welcome; they should know just where to look for the mines. It is cheeky of Tehran, however, to expect the very Gulf states it menaces to entrust the protection of their shipping to Ayatollah Khomemi.

A better idea was offered the other day by President Reagan's national security adviser. Frank Carlucci. "If the danger recedes" to U.S.-flag vessels, be said, "the escorting" by the U.S. Navy "can stop." Iran, though it is strong on issuing general threats, does not acknowledge responsibility for specific shipping attacks, attributing them to an "invisible hand." But if it is serious in urging the U.S. Navy to leave the Gulf, it should want to test this commitment by a ranking official stating the simple condition on which the United States would end the naval operations that Iran finds so ollensive.

The Sad Choices in Haiti

The Reagan administration rightly presses as they were when Jean-Claude Duvalier fled aguay to yield power to civilian democrats. But in Hain it supports Lieutenant General Henri Nampby's discredited junta as long as it adheres to its announced timetable and ground rules for transition to elected government. Going along with the military is a sensible course because Haiti simply doesn't have other functioning political institutions. The elections now scheduled for November offer the only hope for a better alternative. Abandoning the junta undoubtedly would lead to postponement, at the very least, of the November vote. Paradoxically, an undemocratic junta thus seems democracy's best bet. Meanwhile the junta's record inspires scant confidence, and its commitment to a free and orderly election process cannot be taken for granted. It has squandered 18 months without producing any meaningful economic or political development. Haitians are still as poor and desperate

In June, the junta tried to supersede an independent electoral commission, backing down only under considerable popular and diplomatic pressure. Washington's included. Since, at least 40 civilians have died at the hands of soldiers or police. One victim was a presidential candidate. In response to popular protest, the military has been nothing but rigid. It has protected the jobs and fortunes of notorious Duvalierist thugs. These groups have an interest in provoking disorder in an attempt to derail the electoral process and keep their military protectors in power indefinitely.

eaking the pledge to hold free elections would necessarily mean a hreak with the United States. Washington will have to keep a watchful eye and hope the elections provide an opening for genuine democrats to emerge. Sadly, there is no alternative.

The Nazi Legacy Will Linger

The death of Rudolf Hess in Spandau Prison brings to a close the story of the attempt at the Nuremburg trials to bring the leaders of the Third Reich to justice for their crimes committed in the name of the German people. Now that its last inmate is dead, Spandau may soon share the fate of the Chancellery and Hitler's villa at Berchtesgaden and be torn down to prevent it from becoming the object of a neo-Nazi cult. The physical monuments of the Third Reich are easy to destroy; far more difficult to expunge are the political and moral vestiges of the Nazi regime, the consequences of which a divided Germany will continue to bear for a long time to come.

The Road Back to Damascus

The United States is returning its ambassador to Damascus, from where he was withdrawn last year following proof of Syrian complicity in terrorism. The decision marks another small step toward the rehabilitation of Syria in the West, and one reason commonly given for encouraging warmer rela-tions with President Hafez al-Assad is the influence he might have upon Tehran as the ayatollahs' most important ally. So far there is little evidence to support this.

of the Iranian parliament, to use his best offices to secure the hostages' release likely owes as much to political infighting in Tehran as it does to outside intervention. Anyway, his warning that a reciprocal U.S. gesture is needed - pressure on Israel and Kuwan to release terrorists - makes such a deal unthinkable. So the real reason that relations with Syria cannot be rejected is that Mr. Assad is the only conduit of even half-reliable information on the hostages. This conduit must be explored, which is why there is an argument for the return of the U.S. ambassador to Damascas. But nothing more than is necessary for that purpose should be considered.

Against Iran, Patience Is the Only Weapon

W ASHINGTON — Whoever comes to power in Iran after Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini will encounter severe problems. Iran faces enormous economic difficulties; no credit on world-markets, an oil industry ravaged by mismanagement and the Gulf war, and factory output that stands at a fraction of what it was under the shah, Politically: Kurdisb insurgents continue attacks in their decades-old fight for independence; similar turmoil is on the rise in Baluchistan, and 1.5 million to 2 million Afghani refugees have flooded into Iran, some of whom, it can be assumed, are Soviet agents.

But along with all the problems, Ayatollah Khomeini will leave legacies of strength. The first is the ideological makeup of the populace. Many people have been killed in the war, left the country or been the victims of political repression. But one statistic rings out as crucial: 45 percent of all Iranians are now under 16 years old - an ideologically malleable group that assures the revolution a near majorits of devout followers into the long-term future.

The second legacy is fierce independence. From World War II until the 1979 revolution, Iranians had believed that foreign powers controlled their desuny. This inferiority complex was especially intense regarding the United States, which did in fact hold great sway over internal Iranian affairs. Ilt was the United States that, in 1953, helped bring back the shah by orchestrating a coup that overthrew the militantly nationalist prime minister. Mohammed Mossadegh). This psychology has been starkly reversed under Ayatoliah Khomeini, and most Iranians — a people generally suscepti-ble to conspiracy theories — now consider Iran's destiny to be in Iranian bands.

Finally, Iran under Ayatollah Khomeini bas become a martial state. Opposition to the war exists, but it cannot mask the reality of a new and aggres sive military spirit. The last time Iran had fought a war was in 1826 against Russia — a war that fran lost. Since, many Iranians had assumed the country bad no taste or talent for war. But with the successful defense of Iranian territory against the Iraqi invasion, Iran has emerged as a country with not only lighting capabilities (which it had under the shah) but the will to use them. Combined with its population and industrial-military potential, Iran will be a regional military force far into the future.

For the United States, now escalating its military presence in the Gulf, the implications of Iran's new-found warlike nature are profound — espe-cially when contrasted with the continuing U.S. qualms about using military force. Compare the most recent Iranian and American experiences with war. In the last eight years, Iran has lost bundreds of thousands of people in its conflict with Iraq, and it shows few signs that it will stop. Entire towns have been erased from the map in Khuzistan, waves of young Iranians have gone to their deaths with the promise of martyrdom, Iranian forces have been the targets of chemical weapons and Iraqi missiles have struck inside Tehran.

What is the United States willing to do to further punish such a country? How far is it willing to go? Disenchantment with the Vietnam War was based not only on American casualties and confusion as to why the United States was there but on a profound discomfort with the killing and destruc-tion that U.S. military power had caused. Recall, too, the concern of the American populace when there were civilian casualties in Grenada, and when Colonel Mosmmar Gadhafi's daughter was killed in the air attack on Libya.

Now the Reagan administration has a list of potential Iranian targets for retaliation, targets reportedly chosen with an eye toward a minimal loss of life, either American or Iranian — "surgical strikes" that would entail little sacrifice, that would be punish Iran through technological wiz-ardry without soiling U.S. hands. But what can such a style of war-making accomplish against a country that has lost more people to war in the last seven years than the United States lost in World War II, Korea and Vietnam combined?

Thus, U.S. policy makers are faced with major questions about the use of its military strength and about the enduring nature of the Iranian revolution, a revolution that will remain anti-American into the foreseeable future. The options available to the United States are limited, but they do exist. They

· Second, it should maintain only a low-key presence in the Gulf. Given the military constraints noted above, a military showdown not only would be useless as a coercive measure, it would further isolate Iran, enhance the regime's aggressive nature and even possibly force Iran into the Soviet camp. This is not to say that the United States will never be forced to take a military stand against Iran. But that time has not come; the circumstances do not exist to warrant paying the high price of a military showdown. U.S. policy makers must realize that, even though dialogue or con-structive relations with Iran are exceedingly difficult if not impossible, confrontation is not an acceptable alternative. A policy of patience and neutrality may be politically impalatable for the Reagan administration and its successor, but it is. Resign administration and its successor, but the best path for the United States to follow.

The Gamble For Peace Is The Best Bet

And some Republicant see any negotiations short of a total Sandinist surrender as a shameful sellout. Standing back: The speaker of the House of Representatives, Jim Wright, House of Representatives, Jim Wright, a Democrat, after being approached by the White House offered a set of proposals for a cease-fire, suspension? of U.S. military aid to the contras and Soviet aid to the Sandinists. believing the Sandinists had been hurt

But Washington, faced with possible success, went haywire. The administration and Mr. Wright acted as if stration, and Mr. Wright acted as it the Gustemala plan was the only one on the table. This assonished everyone, including the Central American presi-dents, who fully expected that the two plans would be negotiated out. For instance, the Gustemala proposals do not cut back Soviet aid to Nicaragus. The Central Americans think this is something the United States ought to take up forcefully with the Russians, not an outrageous idea.

Soon enough, Washington was entering a few reservations to the Guatemals plan, appropriately. For instance, aid to the contras would cease a couple of months before the ceasea couple of months before the cease-fore got under way, plainly ridiculous. Some State Department people were blasphemous enough to suggest that Congress should put money in escrow for the contras in case the Sandansts med democracy and decided they didn't like it after all. The pro-Sandinists in this country acted as if it were a damnable sin to suggest that the United States should not immediately destroy the contras, whose existence brought about the opportunity for negotiations.

As for the Sandinists, they are putting police does on the opposition and muttering that if the world does not give them more oil they may not go in for democracy after all. No surprise; no sensible believer in political freedom would base negotiations on consider scrious negotiations and instead wait for the contras to wipe out the Sandinists and hold a victory parade in Managua. One famous expert on contras has said publicly that this would not happen: Oliver North.

Or it can decide that one day the Sandinists, because of a collapsing power after Ayatollah Khomeini's Sandinists, because of a collapsing death. Then the United States might accountry, contra pressure and internal imirest, will be ready to agree to proposals that would open Nicaraguan politics to representatives of the opposition, including contras, free the press and other prisoners and create the conditions for a real election. There are officials in Washington who feel that the time is not yet — that another year of fighting is necessary. That would mean another year of Nicaraguan deaths that might be avoided if real talks started now. But trust in Sandinists, who have worked desperately to turn Nicaragua into a Communist state, can never be the basis of a peace settlement meant to bring democracy. The basis will be the belief that once the Sandinists have been forced into a real liberalization they will not be able to reverse it without igniting a revolution, and that, therefore, the anti-Sandmists of Nicaragua, left, center and right, will have a decent chance to compete with the Sandinists in a free election.

It is a gamble for both sides. Washington will try to keep the contras alive until liberalization in Managua seems irreversible. The Sandinists will try to keep some Soviet military aid flowing to defeat the revolution that may come if they abort liberalization.

That is called reducing the risks each side trying to get the best odds.

It is also called negotiation, and you get in or get out. The United States should be in, and negotiating, hard.

The Radicals Are Seeking Escalation By Marvin Zonis

and Daniel Brumberg

HICAGO - With Iran apparently having mined the Gulf sealanes, pressure is mounting for an escalation of military force that might well draw the United States into a war with Iran. While it would emerge the victor, one crucial outcome would be to strengthen the political forces in Tehran most inimical to long-term U.S. interests.

Iran's radical clerics, frustrated by their limited influence in the Gulf region and the Arab world, and seeking to bolster their position in the struggle to succeed the ailing Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, have taken the offensive. That is why they insti-gated the recent riots in Mecca. But their most important opportunity for where they can challenge the United States. conviction that Mr. Gorbachev is serious and determined about economic reform. Moreover, they believe that restructuring is essential if the Soviet Union is to regain economic momenturn, overcome the widening technological gap between East and West and maintain strategic parity with the United States. Yet, even as the Chinese see Mr. Gorbachev solidifying his position internally, they are uncertain about his prospects for success.

First, as one official said, the Soviet Union has had 70 years of centralized economic control and planning, nearly twice China's dosage. The fatherland of modern Communism, he seemed to say, will have a harder time disavowing its ideological identity than China has had. Second, the Cultural Revolution discredited revolutionary utopian policies. Moreover, it severely weakened the bureaucracy and produced a total turnover in leadership. The Soviet Union's institutional apparatus and apparatchiks, in the Chinese view, are far more entrenched and resistant than those in China,

Third, Beijing's foreign policy does not seriously compete for searce resources with economic reform, as Moscow's does. The Chinese continue to insist firm-

They are: the Soviet withdrawal of forces from Afghanistan (the Chinese view the recent withdrawal of six regiments as cosmetic); the withdrawal of forces from Mongolia and along China's border (the Chinese acknowledge greater progress here), and, most im-portantly, withdrawal of the Soviet-backed Vietnamese Army from Cambodia (where they see diplomatic scurrying but not much movement).
Still, from the Chinese perspective the tenor and tone of China-Soviet relations has improved — and the Chinese clearly are fascinated by the prospects of further improvement. Despite reservations about Soviez developments, they appear to want Mr. Gorbachev to succeed. An economically preoccupied Moscow poses less of a security threat to China's northern NEW YORK - According to a mesborder, freeing China to concentrate more on its pressing economic agenda. An economically more vibrant Soviet Union is a healthier trading partner for China. And a steady widening of the U.S.-Soviet economic gap may make the Chinese - who are most comfortable with a superpower bal-

There appears to be little danger, for the foreseeable future, of any resumption of a Chinese-Soviet alliance, or even a Chinese tilt away from the United States, unless the Soviet Union makes fundamental concessions in Asia. Moscow has little to offer that would warrant China's antagonizing the West and Japan, where the capital Soviet domestic developments also pervades their view of Mr. Gorbaand technology China needs now lies. The United States should not fear a gradual, and likely, Chinese-Soviet rapprochement so long as it is under-taken without the Chinese making concessions on basic regional interests both Beijing and Washington share. Such a reduction of tensions could defuse an always dangerous border situation and facilitate progress on resolving regional conflicts that can erupt into broader confrontations.

It is important for the United States to continue pursuing a constructive re-lationship with China on its own ments, not as a corollary of policy toward the Soviet Union. China, embodying one-fourth of mankind, is important to America today; as it gains in economic strength, its global significance will become even more profound.

U.S. Studying Boycott On Iranian Oil Imports

By Neil A. Lewis New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration is studying whether to impose a boycott of oil trade with Iran, a trade that is understood to be far greater than previously thought, U.S. officials said. But other senior officials said they were skeptical as to whether a boycout would be effective. Oil accounts for three-fourths of lran's $612 million of annual imports into the United States, according to public figures. But officials say that these figures significantly underestimate the oil trade because they cover only direct imports of Iranian crude.

Large additional amounts of Iranian oil come to the United States, officials said, after being refined in the Virgin Islands by the Amerada Hess Corp. and by other smaller companies elsewhere in the Caribbean. There is nothing illegal about these imports, but some officials have become concerned because the amount of these refined products has sharply increased in the because of the agreement between last several months.

ARTS/LEISURE

Gems Turning In a Sparkling Performance

International Herald Tribune

N EW YORK —The art market is driven by two forces, fashions, rooted in taste, and the eagerness to buy, which reflects an easy cash flow. Here, the soundest indicator is the precious-stones market, where prices are determined by the quality of the raw material, not style, or hardly so.

And regarding stones, eagerness has never been so easily stirred as has just been demonstrated. On Aug. 7. The New York Times reported that a pear-shaped diamond weighing 64.83 carats and classified as D flawless, the top, was coming up at Christie's on Oct. 20. Since then, phone calls have been pouring in. True, this is the biggest D flawless diamond ever seen at auction. François Curiel, an executive vice president of Christie's North America, says that he bas never seen anything like it — nor like the response it has generated. There have been 15 serious inquiries of which two are flawlessly serious. He expects the stone to sell in the area of $7 million or roughly $100,000 per carat. The Christie's expen sees the current excitement as a logical sequel to the metamorphosis undergone by the gem market last season.

It has doubled in size. Curiel to the end of July 1987, $205 million worth of jewelry has changed hands at auction. This compares with $94 million in the previous season. According to Curiel's calculations, New York accounts for $89 million, London for $13 million, Geneva for $98 million, which includes the $50 million spent on the Duchess of Windsor's jewels at Sotheby's on April 5 and 6. Minor sales account for the remaining $5

This sale was an event of enormous magnitude. The organization of the logistics, the deft handling of the media by Sotheby's press office and the superb performance of Nicholas Rayner as an auctioneer were important factors in the stunning outcome. Yet, looking at it in retrospect, many professionals say things could not have gone differently. Had the sale taken place a year earlier, it would not have done nearly as well. There is a new climate, and dealers played a major role as boosters at the top end of the market. Professionals cite several instances.

Take one of the sensations of the Windsor sale, the 19.77 carat emerald sold for $2,167,000. This was the first time that an emerald had topped the $1 million mark. The previous record had been set in November 1979 at Christie's in Geneva, by a 12.64 carat gem sold for "only" $670,000. Yet the buyer of the $2.16 million emerald was no greenhorn impressed by the Windsor myth: Laurence Graff of Lon-profession, worldwide. Further proof that prices of that order were not just the consequence of the Windsor mirage came in New York in the same month. On April 17, Sotheby's sold

The problem of protecting important docu-ments in places where scholars are welcome is nationwide. Manuscripts, prints and drawings have soared in value in recent years. Presidential letters and Civil War documents signed by famous generals, similar to those that were allegedly found in Mount's safe deposit boxes, are sold by private dealers and big auction houses for thousands of dollars. But it is not only the chance to make money that leads to theft by real or fraudulent scholars. According to library authorities, it is also the idea of secretly possessing a historic letter that can be a strong temptation.

The director of special collections in the library of the University of California at Los Angeles. David Zeidberg, has been studying the problem. He serves as chairman of a committee of the Association of College and Research Librarians that is dealing with the security of rare books and manuscripts. "We've written new guidelines to prevent thefts and also model legislation for states." Zeidberg said. "But we Zeidberg said that another problem militating against effective security was the attitude of some library officials. "A lot of these thefts are swept under the rug," he said. "There is some fear that trustees or donors or the public might hesitate to help a library if they thought security was weak."

Among the preventive measures proposed by the Association of College and Research Librarians are these:

both on the way in and the way out. At the British Library in London, according to Christine Hall of the library's public affairs office, there are guards and staff members stationed so readers are never left alone with documents. And for the last 17 years or so, Hallsaid, there has been an interesting wrinkle: a, a fine scale, similar to those in post offices, that weighs documents to the nearest gram when manuscripts are taken out and then returned.

From Autos to Soup Cans, A Bar Code Makes Its Mark

By PHILIP E. ROSS

ETROIT — The bar codes designed to hurry groceries through checkout lanes are now being applied to parts on car assembly lines, allowing automakers and suppliers to cut costs by managing their inventories more tightly. The thick and thin, black-and-white lines on soup cans, cereal boxes and most supermarket products can be read by a laser scanner, sometimes mounted on the counter.

In a grocery store, a sale is recorded and the computerized inventory is updated as soon as the code passes before the scanner. Supermarkets pioneered the technology because they had the most to gain. Profit margins are so low in that business that the motivation to save is higher," said Ram Rachamadugu, an industrial management expert at the University of Michigan's business school. "Even when the states mandated stamping the price on products, bar coding was still useful for accuracy and inventory control."

Some parts

U.S. automakers became interested in bar coding in the early 1980s, a decade after the grocery industry had adopted the uniform product code for its bar labels. The lag largely reflected a feeling in Detroit that its competitive position was secure. But faced with increased competition from overseas and the oil shocks of the 1970s, the industry began to pay more attention to cost cutting and efficiency.

Bar codes are now imposed from the top: Automakers require them of suppliers, and many suppliers require them of their suppliers. The effect has been to advance both plant automation and the Japanese manufacturing technique called "just-in-time." in which parts are shipped only as they are needed.

In 1981, 12 of the largest North American automakers and suppliers formed the Automotive Industry Action Group to establish standards for bar codes and to cajole smaller suppliers into accepting the technology.

Still, some automotive suppliers have been reluctant to accept bar coding. They feel they are being asked to bear the cost of the bar codes while the benefit goes almost wholly to the customers. AT THE Detroit stamping plant of Budd Co., a major automotive parts supplier, J. Richard Schmitt, a materials and inventory supervisor, said that bar coding had so far saved money for customers but not for Budd. "It hasn't really done anything for reducing our inventory," said Mr. Schmitt, who is helping introduce bar coding at Budd.

"Die transitions, for example, are no faster."

Die transitions, during which the molds against which metal parts are stamped are changed, are often the bottlenecks in a

Richard Kalin, an assembly clerk at Budd's plant, recently demonstrated how he would label a crate of parts ready for a shipment: "I'm asking for a GT door," he said, entering its name, destination and other specifications on a keyboard. Moments later, the computer printer spewed out a three-part panel of labels noting the part, the quantity — there were 12 doors in a crate — the customer and the date. One panel was a receipt for internal accounting, the second was for the customer and the third was a tag for the crate. "We'll start using bar coding internally in the next 18 months," Mr. Schmitt said. "We don't want to jump in before the technology is proved." Budd has thus far invested $31,000 in bar coding

Because bar coding saves money for customers, and as most suppliers are themselves customers, they can expect to benefit as the process permeates the auto industry.

But there are limitations. Bar codes cannot easily be used on tiny parts such as an an electronic component. Nor do they work in wet, corrosive or otherwise hostile environments.

A Hollywood resident who aspires to a role in a television comedy, Mr. Zimmerman is serving as a receptionist for California Federal Savings & Loan Association, where he gets to use his newly acquired word-processing skills. But tomorrow, who knows?

Mr. Zimmerman, 29, is one of a growing army of "temps," people who earn their income through temporary stints of work at various companies rather than joining the permanent payroll of a single employer.

The temporary personnel to-dustry is booming as employers seek to keep their company costs low. Increasingly, managers are discovering that one way to cut costs and avoid the agony of lay-offs when times are tough is to take on extra workers only for limited periods.

Moreover, the companies that supply temporary belp have ben-efited from a seemingly toex-hausuble demand for workers who are up-to-date in modern office technology. As Mr. Zimmerman's own experience shows, however, temps perform a wide range of tasks.

We had a request once where they wanted people to sniff air out of bags," said Marjorie A. Bartok, a Los Angeles area manager with Manpower Inc., the world's largest supplier of temporary personnel. Concerned about safety, Manpower turned down the order, which was from a pollution-control company.

Companies use temporary help to replace workers on vacation, to help on special projects, to cover a vacancy during the search for a permanent worker and for seasonal increases in their workload. More and more, the basic goal is the same: to avoid being unneces-sarily overstaffed with permanent, full-time people. Each time a company places an order for a temporary employee, an arrangement begins that dif-fers radically from the employeremployee relationship that most people are used to.

Say an advertising agency needs a typist. The placement company sends a person, and the advertising agency provides the supervision.
Yet the placement company remains the legal employer, whether the job lasts one day or several months. It pays the workers at rates that, according to such com-panies, are "competitive," and handles all state and federal tax withholding.

In return for such services, the advertising agency reimburses the personnel concern at an amount that is substantially greater than the worker's pay.

The temporary companies pre-fer not to reveal how much they they charge a client company for worker who receives $8 an bour, for example, But according to one industry executive, the mark-up can amount to 40 percent to 50

TORONTO - For the past generation one of the most emotional issues in Canadian politics has been the extent of U.S. ownership of Canadian businesses.

What has been largely unnoticed here is the extent to which Canadian companies have become key players among the foreign investors descending on the United States. Currency Per 8

Alan M. Rugman, an economist at the University of Toronto, contended in a recent study that if trends continue, the level of direct Canadian tovestment to the United States could equal U.S. investment m Canada to five years.

Mr. Rugman's study, for the Toronto-based C.D. Howe Institute research organization, charts a reversal in investment flows between Canada and the United States over the past decade.

In 1975, Canadian companies had only about $5.5 billion invested in the United States, about onefifth of the amount U.S. companies cal company, said that Canada's had tovested in Canada. Dow Edges Up to Set Record

NEW YORK - The Dow Jones industrial average set its 54th record of the year Friday. ending a volatile week with only a slight gain in active trading.

The broader market was almost unchanged from Thursday because of continued weakness

The Dow, which dropped 46 points on Tuesday only to rebound 41 points on Thusday oldsed Friday up 2.71 to 2.709.50. It was the third record of the week.

The Dow had been up as much as 11 points in early Friday trading.

Advancing issues just barely outnumbered lectines among the 2.013 issues traded. Volume eased to about 191 million shares from the 196.5 million traded Thursday. In addition to the Dow, broader market indexes broke day-old records. The New York Stock Exchange index rose 0.47 to 187.51 and Standard & Poor's 500-stock index added 1.06 to 335.90. The price of an average share rose 10

ment's privatization program. Union Bank is owned 60 percent by the government's social security system and 40 percent by Land

Pentagon Drops AmEx Contract

WASHINGTON - The Pentagon said Friday it would not renew a contract with American Express Co. to provide banking services to U.S. military personnel stationed in West Germany, Greece and the Netherlands.

The department said that a (wo-year cootract had been warded after competitive bidding to Merchants National Corp. of Indianapolis, which will operate 134 bank facilities for the U.S. military in those countries. The value of the contract was not disclosed.

The Pentagon said it was the irst time in the postwar period that the American Express would not be involved in U.S. military banking in those coun

Hill Samuel

LONDON - Hill Samuel Omerate San Miguel Corp.

Group PLC said Friday it had PCI Bank, in which the statemanaging director of Hoogkong Land Co. Ltd., as executive vice stake, had net income of 120.4 mil- chairman and chief executive.

Mr. Davies, 47, replaces Christopher N. Casileman, who resigned in protest as chief executive last month when the merchant bank opened merger talks with Unioo Bank of Switzerland. The talks were called off earlier this week.

Mr. Davies, who was appointed a nonexecutive director at Hill Samuel last fall, worked at the merchant bank from 1967 to 1973, then with MEPC PLC, a British developer, until 1983. He was managing director of HongKong Land until last year.

lo a separate development, Hill Samuel said Thursday that two large shareholders had marginally increased their stakes.

FAI Insurances Ltd. of Australia raised its stake to 14.3 percent from 14 percent. Consolidated Press In-ternational (Netherlands Antilles) NV, which is controlled by the Australian businessmao Kerry Packer, raised its stake to 12.6 percent from 12 percent.

Name Change Sought By Allegheny Beverage

CHEVERLY, Maryland - Allegheny Beverage Corp. said Friday that it has proposed changing its oame to Alleco Inc. in a proxy statement mailed to stockholders.

The proxy, Allegheny said, also solicits approval for the previously announced sale of Service America Corp., the company's sole remain-ing subsidiary. The company said that if the sale is supported, the management will ask the board of directors to declare a cash dividend of $1.20 per share,

Japan Adopts Relaxed Stance to Dollar's Fall

TOKYO - Japan has adopted a relaxed attitude toward the dollar's recent decline because of its confi-dence in the health of its economy and in the willingness of major nations to curb sharp currency fluctuations; according to economists.

The government also stands to benefit in some ways from the yen's rise, which has helped dampen inflationary expectations and led to a rally in the bond market where it sells its debt, they said.

Finance Minister Kitchi Miyazawa surprised dealers Thursday by saying that currency rates should be left to the market

His comments caused an avalanche of dollar selling, driving the growth accelerated to 10.3 percent currency to its lowest level against in July from 10 percent in June.

No Cork in Those 2 Bats

NEW YORK - Howard Johnson's favorite bat passed X-ray inspection Thursday for the second time in two weeks, and it was returned to him by the National League office.

And Candy Maldonado of the San Francisco Giants also got elearance for his bat, which was impounded Wednesday night by the umpires at Shea Stadium when the Mets and the Giants got into the battle of the corked bats.

Johnson, whose bat was challenged for the third time this season after he hit his 30th home run Wednesday night, got only one bunt single Thursday after his hat was returned. Maldonado got into the game as a pinch-hitter in the ninth inning and struck out

The game was watched by A. Bartlett Giamatti, president of the league, who defended the oew policy that allows each manager one challenge in a game. "I hope we never find anything." Giamatti said. You don't want cheating in the game. The reason we give managers one challenge is to put a limit on it. Otherwise, you might have endless requests to the umpires to inspect bats."

NFL Decision on Draft Is Criticized

By Gerald Eskenazi

New York Times Service NEW YORK - The National Football League's decision to conduct a draft for players who had lost their eligibility for accepting money from agents has been criti-cized as harmful for college foot-ball because of the possibility that it could lead to an increase in rules

"This case produces a bizarre result," said Leigh Steinberg, a lawthan four months. In 37 games, he who follow the rules have to stay in tive message - take the money from an agent, and if you get found

Bailey said he hoped to meet with NFL officials in New York

"I doo't want to appear unduly critical of the league, but a lot of people in academics are disappointed " he said.

Coach Joe Paterno of Penn State, who boasts an 80 percent graduation rate for the football players he has had over the past 21 years, said of the NFL's decision:
"It's going to cause some problems with college fontball. The NFL has its own problems, and I guess they've got to do what they've got to do to protect themselves."

Bob Woolf, the Boston-based attorney whose clients include Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics, Joe Mootana of the San Francisco 49ers and Vinny Testaverde of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, said that he had "found that every persoo who's stayed in school has benefited from the extra year — Testa-verde, Bird, Bill Cartwright." Cartwright is with the Knicks. Woolf, however, said he had altended in the wake of the NFL's ways believed that the NFL draft was illegal anyway.

"But football is a sport that requires physical and mental devel-opment," he said. "It's a shame Ioan last year from two agents, burn University, said from the Ala. that this - accepting money from agents - precipitated this draft." Actually, the National Basketball Association had a so-called hardship draft for many years, then simply dropped the word hardship and allows any collegians to be placed in its draft. But LaVell Edwards, the president of the American Football Coaches Association and the coach at Brigham Young for 16 years, said of the decision, "I hated to see

He said that Carter "was in violation of NCAA rules, and as a result, we had to make a decision. It's sad that some players think if they come out early they will gain riches sooner." The NCAA's director of media services, Jim Marchiony, said the decision would have the same effect on colleges as "the NBA draft has on college basketball. Any student has the right to do what he wants, to declare himself in a draft." In explaining the league's decision, Jay Moyer, the executive vice president and counsel, wrote Edwards, "Since an athlete has been found to 'professionalize' himself under the NCAA's own rules, it is unrealistic to expect the NFL to reject his professional status."

Ups and Downs

Peter Lundgren of Sweden, above, raises his arms in victory after defeating countryman Mats Wilander, below, in a tournament in Mason, Ohio. Unseeded Lundgren, 22, controlled the tempo of the match Thursday, using crisp passing shots and aggressive play at the net, to beat the top-seeded Wilander, 6-1, 6-4, and advance to the quarterfinals. "It's the best feeling I've ever had as a tennis player," Lundgren said. "It means a lot of points [in the world rankings]. He's the No. 1 Swede, No. 2 in the world, so it's a very good result." Wilander won the tournament in 1983, 1984 and 1986. "He's a good player, when he gets it going," said Wilander, who was 23 on Friday. "For him, there's nothing inbetween. He's really up or down. Now he's playing really well."

Blind Sailor Gives Up Sail For This Year

who was trying to become the first blind person to sail alone across the Atlantic, said Friday that he would not make a second attempt this

"It's late in the season and frankly, money problems, getting the necessary backup equipment means that I don't think I should ury for it in what's left of the summer," Dieksoo said in an interview on ABC's "Good Morning Ameri-

Dickson left Portsmouth, Rhode Island, for Plymouth, England on Aug. 4, hut was forced to make a detour south to Bermuda when he had problems with his 36-font (11meter) sloop's satellite navigation system and autopilot.

The journey was further delayed when Dickson had to ride out rough seas and heavy winds from tropical storm Arlene in the sloop, the Eye Opener. He said last week that the yaeht needed ahout' $12,000 in repairs after the storm.

Dickson said that although he was calling off his trans-Atlantic sail, he was not disappointed with

"I set out to get the country talking about the appalling conditions and lack of opportunity facing the country's disabled, and I think I did that far beyond my wildest dreams. And I've also had a terrific time on the Freedom 36, which is a wonderfully fast, safe, and dry boat," he said.

The yachısman has said a solo crossing aided by a talking computer is a vital part of his efforts to challenge prejudice against the handicapped. He said last week that the onset of the height of the hurricane season might prevent him from completing the sail.

He also said he would never agaio attempt a major single-handed sailing trip without reserve autopilot equipment aboard - an item he hadn't been able to raise money for on his first effort.

Dieksoo said he did not know when he would be able to make another attempt.

"That's really a question of money," Dickson said. "For the last three months, I've been spending half the time raising money and half the time dealing with the boat. "If money stuff can sort itself out, I also have a lot of personal deht that I have to deal with," he

"I feel very good about what was accomplished," he added. "There are not a lot of sailors who can sail alone without satnay (satellite navigation], without autopilot, 320 miles and make their landfall."

THE latest addition to the Greek navy, swoop-Ling like a stately natural centipede across the Bay of Phaleron near Athens, is a 45-ton warship of the kind that once ruled the seas and profoundly influenced the development of the modern world.

The ship is a replica, as exact as science, scholarship and inspired guesswork can make it of a 170oar trireme from the heyday of Athenian power in the fifth century R.C., the first to be built for perhaps 2,000 years.

lo the presence of Andreas Papandreou, the prime minister, Melina Mercouri, the culture minister and other civilian and military dignitaries, the ship will be commissioned in the Hellenic navy Wednesday and then rowed along the coast to a mooring off the island of Kea so that the population of Athens can have a good look at it.

Until the commissioning, its name is by tradi-tion a military secret — although the betting is on Olympia, a name that graced triremes in the classical period, and that symbolizes Greece's present hope of hosting the 1996 Olympic Games. 'It is so beautiful," Mercouri said in a telephone interview. " It represents Greece in all her glory." Until recently, no one had a clear idea of how a trireme performed or what it was like to ply one of its oars. These questions are of significance to anyone who wonders how a tiny city-state in distant history could have produced so many ideas that still influence the 20th century. The trireme was fundamental to Athens' greatness and to the development of its democracy.

That this one was built is partly due to John Coates's tennis elbow. Laid up for six months with that affliceon in 1979. Coates turned from his usual job of helping to design destroyers for the British Royal Navy to pondering how the trireme worked. In doing so, he studied a book by John Morrison, a professor of classics, about Greek cared ships.

Io 1941. Morrison put forward the theory, derided by many other scholars at the time, that the carsmen on a trireme were arranged on three levels with oars of the same length, shout six meters (19 feet). Other theories were that the rowers were on the same level, or that there were three men to each

Coates deduced that Morrisoo was right. Putting together all the evidence, he said in a telephone interview from Athens, "I found there was only one possible design," and only Morrison's theory fitted all the known facts about triremes. Just as modern weapons tend to look alike according to their function, he said, the trireme had to be built in a certain way according to its function of ramming enemy ships at high speed with its semi-submerged bronze beak. Many scraps of evidence went into Coates's design. He knew the size the ship had to be about 37 meters long by 5.5 wide — from the dimensions of boat sheds excavated near Athens. Because the upkeep of the triremes was privately financed by wealthy Athenians as part of their "liturgia" or public service obligations, detailed inventories exist. Inscriptions from ancient naval dockyards provided a virtual shopping list of the materials needed to build a trireme. Thucydides, Xenophon and other classical authors gave information about the trireme's performance. Thucydides told how the crew of one trireme, sustained by harley dipped in oil and wine, averted a massacre by rowing the 184 nauti-cal miles from Athens to Mytilene in 24 hours, an average speed of more than 7 1/2 knots. Ramming speeds were much higher than that.

Finally, recent underwater discoveries of sunker Greek merchant ships, and particularly of a long ship off the coast of Sicily, gave Coates a good idea of the construction methods employed.

Coates got in touch with Morrison to cooperate on the design of a trireme at what he called "the dilettante level, as a hobby for a couple of retired gentlemen." Later a writer and former banker. Frank Welsh, offered to sponsor the building of a trireme and Coates started drawing detailed plans.

The plans were shown at a symposium in Londoo in April, 1983, at which point the Greek government became interested. After a model of a section of the ship was successfully tested on the Thames, it was agreed the trireme would be built for the Greek navy at Piraeus, from where the Athenians set off on their ancient naval battles. It was huilt in two years at the shipyard of Dmitrios Tzakakos at a cost of 80 million drachmas (about $560,000), "That's expensive, but she is so beautiful," said Commander Nikos Gogos, a spokesman for the navy.

Coates, Morrison and Welsh watched proudly as a team of British university and club rowers put the trireme through its sea trials off the island of Poros earlier this month. "The Greek navy has been marvelous in paying John Coates and me the compliment of believing what we said," Morrison said in a telephone interview. "It does look as if we put it together right."

Coates said the Trireme "maneuvers rather better than expected. She steers beautifully." The cars were deliberately made on the heavy side to prevent breakage during the inevitable tangles. And the British crew was not well matched in terms of weight and size. Nevertheless they managed to raise seven knots for a few minutes during the trials. "With lighter oars and a properly graded crew, nine knots is in sight," Coates said.

Using sails, the trireme was able to reach at a respectable 5 knots in a 15-knot wind. In ancient times, the sails were used on passage when the wind served, but oot in battle.

Getting 170 people, each with less legroom than passenger on the average charter mircraft, to pull together in faultless precision was a lesson in human relations and a clue to what made the ancient Athenians the kind of people they were. "Our preliminary experiences have shown that it would have been crazy to try to man one of these things with any crew that didn't want to be aboard." Coates said.

The fact that Athenian triremes were rowed by free citizens, not slaves or mercenaries, is a clue to the nature of Athenian democracy in the fifth century B.C.

According to a writer of the period, known to historians as the Old Oligarch, it was appropriate in Athens that "the poor and the common people should seem to have more power than the noble and rich, because it is this class that provides the rowers for the fleet and on which the power of the city is hased."

The importance of the fleet shifted power away. from the propertied yeomen who provided the hoplites, or heavily armed soldiers, and toward the garlio-chewing "sailor rabble" in the city who manned the triremes.

With help from Corinth, the Athenian fleet mashed Xerxes and his borde at Salamis in 480 B.C., removed the threat of Persian invasion, and opened the way to Athens' golden age, but also to an age of fighting among the Greeks.

Naval supremacy gave the Athenians an empire. a confidence and a cosmopolitanism ocver scen before. Most Greeks, said the Old Oligarch, were insular "whereas the culture of Athens is a medley of elements drawn from all parts of the Greek world and even from the Barbarians."

Commodore Apostolos Vassiliadis of the Greek Navy said it is hoped to take the trireme to other countries as an evocation of that age. Beyond using the vessel to further historical research, the navy has made no firm plans for its latest acquisition. Greek team of carsmen drawn from rowing clubs is in training to man the ship, which will be commanded by a naval officer, Lieutenant Dmitrios Papadas. Asked if other navies would be welcome to send crews to row the trireme. Vassiliadis replied, "Why not?"

Later this month, scholars from around the world will meet at Delphi for a conference on ship construction in history, and the experience gained from building and rowing the trireme is likely to be a major topic of discussion.

Coates said an enormous amount can potentially be learned about battles and naval tactics of the past by studying the performance of the trireme. The Athenians avoided close quarters combat and instead used a combination of speed and complicated maneuvers to defeat their enemies.

But the Athenians ignored the advice of their greatest statesman, Pericles, by becoming involved in a land war far from home. In 413, the Athenian fleet was destroyed by a combined Syracusan and Spartan force in the harbor at Syracuse in Sicily.

The Athenian sailors and ships were out of condition after a long siege. They were blocked in a narrow harbor where they could not employ their swooping tactics. The Syracusans reinforced their ships and charged prow first into the Athenian Sparta destroyed the Greek fleet at Aegospotami and what little remained of Athenian democracy in 405 B.C. The sound of wailing arose all over Athens, said Xenophon, because the Athenians "thought that they themselves would now be dealt with as they had dealt with others." It was, effectively, the end of the age of the democraticallymanned trireme.
